Introduction

This report compiles data on many factors to show the growth of cities compared to data for the state and the nation. It is important to note that both the state and the nation are shown as to have a comparison to how each of the cities are doing compared to state-level and national level growth. Some factors included in the report are employment statistics, median household income, home prices, and total housing units available.

The factors on which this report is based on were chosen carefully based on numerous talks with experts in the field. Housing data are included in this report because the housing market is 15-18% of US GDP, and houses are a significant purchase for many. Housing data can act as a leading indicator of economic activity, whether positive or negative. The housing information included in this report gives an insight into available housing for a growing population (total household units) and quality of life for those houses (home prices). When one observes a higher price for a home in a city in the WAMPO region as opposed to the greater Kansas area or the United States as a whole, one can conclude that the residents of that city may live a higher quality of life, on average, to that of the average person living in Kansas or the US. It is important to note that with trends, it is irregular for a city to be a negative trend to their respective state. When an increased in housing prices is matched by a proportional increase in annual income, it's a good sign for the growing households in the region that quality of life is increasing—an important factor in welfare economics. A disparity between the two may be a leading indicator of a housing crisis.

Employment and unemployment curves are typically inverses of the other, though the stickiness of wages may prevent a true inverse relationship. Exceptions to this may occur, especially with smaller sample sizes such as the cities found at the end of this report. The labor force participation rate measures all workers over the age of 16 who have a job or are actively looking for one, excluding active-duty military and those who are incarcerated or institutionalized. Unemployment is defined by those within the labor force who do not have a job and are actively looking for work.

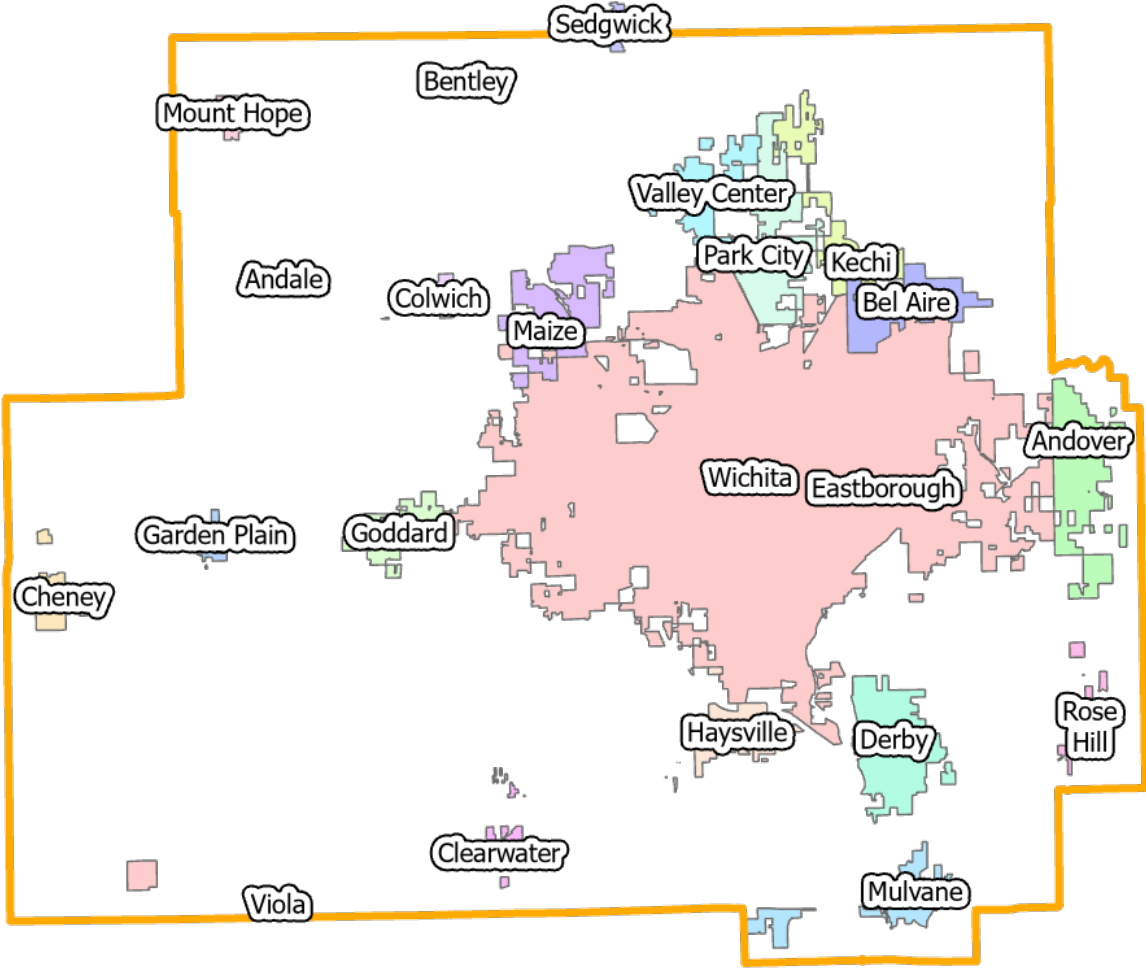

A high participation rate combined with a low unemployment rate indicates a thriving economy. Unemployment leads to lost wages, fewer goods and services available, and decreased purchasing power of the unemployed. All numbers have been adjusted for inflation.

The data was collected through the American Community Survey via the U.S. Census Bureau, last updated December 10, 2020. Some data is considered estimates rather than true data points. The design of the data tables were referenced from the Kansas City Federal Reserve Regional Databooks. The cities in this report are presented in decreasing population order.

Note: The data presented in this report include all of the City of Sedgwick, even though it is not entirely within the WAMPO region.
